

Report: Introductory Session by the AIL Centre for Personal Law (ACPL)

Date: 7th November 2024 Time:

1:45 p.m.

Venue: First year Classrooms

The AIL Centre for Personal Law (ACPL) conducted an introductory session for the first-year students on 7th November 2024. This session aimed to acquaint the new students with the Centre's vision, objectives, and future activities, fostering a welcoming environment for their involvement in ACPL initiatives.

Attendees:- The session witnessed an enthusiastic participation from the first-year batch, keen to explore ACPL's opportunities. The ACPL team members presenting during this session were:

- Mehak Jamwal
- Rebecca Kanwar
- Amishi

Session's Highlights

- Introduction to ACPL's Vision and Objectives:- The session began with an introduction to the Centre's mission, focusing on ACPL's dedication to fostering research and knowledge in the field of personal law. The speakers explained ACPL's broader goals of promoting student engagement in understanding and analyzing key issues within personal laws, providing a platform for scholarly exploration.
- Upcoming Activity - " Research Marathon" :- The highlight of the session was the announcement of an upcoming event, the "Research Marathon," aimed at encouraging students to delve into intensive legal research and analysis. The presenters shared the event's objectives, guidelines, and timeline, motivating the students to participate actively and contribute their unique perspectives.
- Launch of ACPL Law Review:- In an exciting development, the ACPL officially opened submissions for its LawReview, an esteemed publication welcoming student submissions on various family law related topics. The session emphasized that the LawReview provides a valuable platform for students to publish their legal insights, furthering their research skills and building their portfolios as future legal professionals.
- Closing Remarks:-The presenters concluded with an invitation to all students to participate in the provided activities conducted by ACPL. They emphasized the value of early involvement in legal research and community activities for the students' academic and professional growth.

